

Professor Udo Staber

Udo Staber (Ph.D. Cornell University) is Professor and Chair of Organization Studies at the University of Canterbury. He has held professorial positions at Pennsylvania State University, University of New Brunswick, and Stuttgart Institute of Management and Technology, as well as visiting professorships at University of Mannheim and University of Augsburg.

His research interests are in evolutionary organization theory, with special reference to the study of social and interorganizational networks in regional business clusters and industrial districts. He is currently coordinating an international comparative study of identity formation and policy making in newly emerging regional clusters.