FROM THE PRESIDENT’S DESK

Dear ANZAM Member Colleagues

Your ANZAM Board has met twice since the ANZAM Conference in Queenstown last December to progress key strategies and activities. Just when we think things are progressing smoothly, along come a couple of challenges. It’s called Management, right? My daughters used to say if I ever complained: “It’s called Motherhood – you signed up for it”. It feels a bit like that. I know we/ANZAM will get through these challenges, as in many respects we are in better shape than ever – and that’s due to great support from members, the journal being on a sounder footing with an internationally renowned publisher, finances on a more stable footing, and the Conferences and Early Career events being abuzz with interest.

Search for new Editor in Chief for the Journal of Management & Organization

Our first challenge is to find a new Editor-in-Chief for the Journal of Management & Organization, the ANZAM journal that is published by Cambridge University Press. Professor Tim Bentley, who has moved back to Massey University this year and taken up responsibilities there, is wanting to stand down from December. He has done a fantastic job as Editor-in-Chief, following Professor Peter Galvin who was involved in transitioning the journal to the new publisher. Tim has ensured the journal is listed on more databases and is much more highly visible. He has worked to build JMO’s reputation as a journal that publishes increasingly higher quality management research with a focus on context. Submission levels are healthy and rejection rates comparable with a tier 1 (A) level journal. As a colleague recently said to me, “realistically JMO is a journal that could well merit moving from B to A status on the ABDC list”. In any case it is worth pitching your work to – it runs efficiently and well; it has a good Editorial Board and Editorial team, and Tim has worked well with them. Thank you Tim for offering to stay on as an Associate Editor and for helping us with the transition. A call for expressions of interest in the Editor-in-Chief role is included following this report, and I’d really welcome your response. It’s called editorship, it’s got status, it goes on your CV. But more than that you get to shape what counts as management research in the Australian and New Zealand context and beyond. ANZAM currently allows about $8,000 annually for the Editor-in-Chief, for administrative assistance and other necessary costs.

2017 Conference in Melbourne Hosted by RMIT

The next challenge is not immediately one for ANZAM, but for RMIT and Professor Pauline Stanton, Head of School of Management, whose two appointed Conference Chairs for 2017 are moving universities. I did say it’s called Management! It isn’t always easy; otherwise there would not be value in our studying or teaching it. I have to say, on behalf of the ANZAM Board and our members, we are extremely grateful to Deans who support us, and Heads of School like Pauline who are prepared to go the extra mile for ANZAM and become a Conference host. It is a big undertaking – and we have seen it done extremely well in different ways over a number of years. No pressure there! We’ll be grateful to see it done the Melbourne way and look forward to talking with RMIT folk at our next Board Meeting in September. Great they got the brochure done in time for the British Academy of Management Conference in Newcastle, so that folk in that part of the world can plan for a trip Down Under in December 2017.

STOP PRESS: We are delighted to welcome Professor Shams Rahman and Dr Cameron Duff as 2017 Conference Co-Chairs, and look forward to working with them.

Still Happening: Early Career Academics Workshops, Heads of Schools of Management Meeting and Institutional Members Forum

With help from local organisers and ANZAM Research Fellows when available, your Board has run very successful ECA sessions so far in 2016. We did so in Perth and Canberra in April, as well as in Sydney in July.

Former Board member Rowena Barret organised the Heads of Schools of Management meeting in Sydney in July with three external speakers and experts in the areas of managing performance. We considered the what, where and how to of high (academic) performance – as well as what some of the institutional constraints were. Heads of Schools having large numbers of direct reports in so-called flat organizational structures was not seen as leading to best practice in performance management. Nor were one-off annual meetings reviewing or merely planning the next year’s workload. And finally, those cascading university, business school, and department goals – how many of you have those as part of your performance plan? Work to do there for some.

Board member Melanie Bryant organized the Institutional Members Forum attended by 24 Institutional Members in Sydney in July. Facilitated by Anne Smyth in World Cafe style, participants considered the meaning of universities, business and management schools, and academics being industry-linked.

In Conclusion

My sincere appreciation goes to the Board and the Academy Manager, Anne Anderson, for their enthusiasm, ideas, energy for a myriad of tasks, and ongoing support they have provided to ANZAM this year. Special thanks to those who have hosted us this year, in particular Antoine Hermens at UTS who was again our Sydney host over several days for the various meetings in July.

I hope that the academic year has been going well for all of you. I look forward to seeing you in Brisbane in December at the Conference hosted by QUT. There have been excellent numbers of submissions and I imagine there will be sunshine as well as many good ideas to share, and discussions of research and academic work-life to be had.

Best wishes

Professor Kate Kearins

Expressions of interest invited for Editor of Journal of Management & Organization (JMO)
published by Cambridge University Press

Expressions of interest are sought for the position of Editor in Chief (EIC) for the Journal of Management & Organization (ISSN 1839-3672), the official journal of the Australian and New Zealand Academy of Management (ANZAM), to serve a term of office of three years, beginning on or before 1 January 2017.

The Journal of Management & Organization (JMO) is an international peer-reviewed journal listed in SSCI and published by Cambridge University Press. JMO provides a unique outlet for management research that considers how context shapes managerial theory and practice, recognizing the diversity of business practices and environments found around the world. With a global focus, JMO provides a new perspective for scholars, educators, students and practitioners. Editorial Board members represent esteemed scholars from different regions of the world collectively providing expertise in the thematic areas of strategic management, OB, HRM, employment relations, industrial relations, labour relations, operations management, entrepreneurship, family business, religion and workplace spirituality, international business, governance and corporate social responsibility, organization theory, critical management studies, knowledge management, public sector management, management education, and qualitative, quantitative and mixed methods.

The appointed EIC will take over from Professor Tim Bontley.

In keeping with JMO’s mission we are seeking expressions of interest for the EIC role from individuals who are themselves of high scholarly standing and who are sympathetic to a range of research areas and paradigms associated with the management discipline. The EIC will work with the ANZAM Board of Directors and Cambridge University Press to build the standing of JMO as a leading management journal.

This role could be carried out by an individual or a team. Those interested are asked to submit a short statement (no more than 1000 words) identifying their relevant experience and understanding of JMO and indicating how they would like to take JMO forward over the next three years. Expressions of interest will be accepted from single individuals or groups of individuals prepared to work together, and in the latter case, ideally with a history of successfully working in a pair or particular team.

If you are interested in taking on this role, then please supply a statement demonstrating:

1. Publication profile: based on the quality and quantity of publications, including journal articles in top or leading journals, book chapters and books but not conference papers.
2. Editorial experience: including journal editorships, edited books, guest editorships and membership of editorial boards of top or leading journals.
3. A three-year strategy to further develop the journal and to improve the journal’s global profile as well as usage, citations and rankings.
4. Indication of support from your Department or School/Faculty for this role to be undertaken.

Applications will be considered jointly by the ANZAM Board and Cambridge University Press.

The deadline for applications is 5.00pm on Friday 7 October 2016. Applications should be sent to the ANZAM Manager, Mrs Anne Anderson at Anzam@griffith.edu.au. Applicants who are seeking further information or to discuss this opportunity can contact the current ANZAM President, Professor Kate Kearins at kate.earins@aut.ac.nz.
Reviewers are hard at work evaluating the more than 450 submissions that were received for this year’s Conference. Papers were submitted across the 16 different Streams ensuring ANZAM 2016 will once again have vibrant conversations about many different management-related topics.

Authors should be sent their acceptance letters in early/mid-September, with Early Bird registration closing on 7 October.

Even if you have not submitted a paper, you can still come to the Conference in Brisbane. The welcome reception will be held in Old Government House on Tuesday evening, 6 December, followed by Conference presentations until Friday 9 September.

SPECIAL INTEREST GROUPS

Report of Mid-Year Health Management and Organisation SIG Workshop

Seeking Positivity in Health Care Management – Spreading Brilliance, Excellence and the Really Good Stuff

Generously hosted by UTS Business School - 4 July 2016

The Workshop was a lively event and entailed some very positive outcomes for the SIG. One of these was the “pitch your research” presentation by Dr Ben Farr-Wharton that was simply so fabulous that it inspired us to put forward a different type of end-of-year SIG Workshop proposal (watch this space!). For the first time, and with sincere thanks to ANZAM for its support, we conducted an on-line member survey to guide discussion about the future development of the SIG. An immediate outcome of the findings was the decision to create a dedicated website for the SIG that will be officially launched at the annual ANZAM Conference.

We also planned three special issues, including one for JMO on positive organisational scholarship in health service management, as well as a networking strategy to collaborate with relevant organisations and events such as the Society for Health Administration Programs in Education (SHAPE) and the Australasian College of Health Service Management (ACSHM).

There are exciting times ahead for the SIG, as demonstrated by the energy and dedication of those who attended this and similar Workshops. We are also fortunate and grateful to have a very competent and highly proactive Industry Fellow, Ms Anne Smyth, who has been a significant force in helping us develop the SIG.
